

Umbar

Umbar was an old Haven of Evil Men located to the south of Gondor. Umbar's name was given to it by its first inhabitants, of whom nothing is known anymore. When the first Numenorean settlers came to Umbar, they decided not to change this name. After the division into the King's Men and the Faithful Umbar was a fortress of the King's Men, who built a Great Fortress onto the natural harbour of Umbar in 2280 SA.

The King's Men who lived in Umbar survived the downfall of Numenor and became known as Black Numenoreans.

Being superior to the wild men living around them, these Evil Men soon decided to enslave the Haradrim tribes.

In 933 TA Umbar was attacked and captured by the men of Gondor. During this battle many Men, good and evil, lost their lives

The Black Numenoreans fled, but returned with great strength. They tried to recapture Umbar, but failed because of Gondor's sea-power.

In 1448 the son of Castamir the Usurper fled to Umbar after they lost the battle at the Crossings of Erui in which their father had been slain by the rightful king Eldacar. They brought many Men and the whole gondorian naval force with them.

In umbar they established an independent Lordship and a refuge for all enemies of Gondor (s kings)

The Corsairs often raided the coastland of Gondor and became the most feared enemy of Gondor

Whenever the Men of Gondor saw these black sails they fled into their strongest Fortresses

Nearly as feared as Umbar's naval forces were the Corsair raiders, cruel and bloodthirsty Men, skilled with all kinds of weapons
